King. Well, let it ſtrike.
Buc. Why let it ſtrike?
King. Becauſe that like a Iacke thou keepſt the ſtroke
Betwixt thy begging and my meditation:
I am not in the giuing vaine to day.
Buc. Why then reſolue me whether you will or no?
Kin. Tut, tut, thou troubleſt me, I am not in the vaine, Ex.
Buc. Is it euen ſo, rewards hee my true ſeruice
With ſuch deepe contempt, made I him King for this?
O let me thinke on Haſtings, and be gone
To Brecknocke, while my fearefull head is on. Ex.

Enter Sir Francis Tirrell.

Tir. The tiranous and bloody deede is done,
The moſt arch-acts of pittious maſſacre,
That euer yet this land was guilty of,
Dighton and Forreſt whom I did ſubborne,
To do this ruthfull peece of butchery,
Although they were fleſht villaines, bloudy dogs,
Melting with tenderneſſe and compaſſion,
Wept like two children in their deaths ſad ſtories:
Loe thus quoth Dighton lay theſe tender babes,
Thus, thus quoth Forreſt girdling one another
Within their inocent alablaſter armes,
Their lipes like foure red Roſes on a ſtalke,
Which in there ſommer beauty kiſt each other,
A booke of prayer one their pillow laic,
which onee quoth Forreſt almoſt chang'd my mind,
But O the Diuell! there the villian ſtopt,
Whilſt Dighton thus told, on we ſmoothered
The moſt repleniſht ſweet worke of nature
That from the prime Creation euer he framde,
They could not ſpeake, and ſo I left them both,
To bring theſe tidings to the bloody King,

Enter King Richard.

And heare he comes. All haile my ſoueraigne Liege.
King. Kind Tirrell, and I happy in thy newes?
Tir. If to haue done the thing you gaue in charge
Beget your happyneſſe, bee happy then,
For it is done my Lord.

King. But didſt thou ſee them dead?
Tir. I did my Lord.
